Americans Smoking More In '72

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Americans are smoking an average of 38.8 packs of cigarettes per person this year, the Agriculture Department says.

This is four packs more than the average in 1970, when cigarette smoking by Americans hit bottom after a long decline spurred by reports linking smoking to cancer and other diseases.

The 1972 level is, however, about one per cent below what the Agriculture Department in September predicted it would be.

The figures are for Americans 18 and over. The Department expects the rate to increase again next year partly because of population shifts to the heavy-smoking age brackets and continued consumer income gains.
